March is here, which means the last month of winter is finally coming to a close and art admirers everywhere are slowly venturing out of their seasonal hibernation.

Thankfully, this month has plenty of exhibitions to help usher in the spring in style. From Walter Robinson's painterly renderings of White Castle delights to on-site installations modeled after military sites in Africa, March has a lot to offer in the way of art openings. And with names like Bill Brandt and Garry Winogrand on the calendar, photography fans should be stoked. Scroll through the slideshow below for our preview of 10 must-see exhibits this month, and let us know which shows you can't wait to go to in the comments.

Sean Bluechel: Still Life Is No Life

WHAT: Sean Bluechel: Still Life Is No Life

WHEN: March 1 - April 6, 2013

WHERE: Nicole Klagsburn

WHY: Bluechel's exhibit includes a number of sculptures that pay homage to various vessels and containers throughout history ("from Sumerian vessels to modern-day Tupperware," as the cheeky press release states). In addition, his photography series, "Drunk Photos," is on view. Get ready for some hilarious moments, guys.
